Sediment Education Intern Position available
Land Quality Section, N.C. Division of Land Resources

Closing date: April 30, 2003

The Land Quality Section of the N.C. Division of Land Resources seeks a college or university student in an engineering, soil science, or other relevant curriculum to fill an immediate part-time position as Sediment Education Intern. This internship is sponsored by the N.C. Sedimentation Control Commission. The individual selected will work directly with the Land Quality Section staff on educational projects to promote effective implementation of erosion and sediment control practices in North Carolina.

Duties/tasks to be carried out by the Sediment Education Intern include:

- developing erosion and sediment control education projects approved by the Sedimentation Control Commission
- providing technical assistance (train with an engineer on erosion control plan reviews and site inspections)
- organizing, developing, and presenting educational presentations on erosion and sediment control to students, professionals, civic groups, etc.
- developing and distributing promotional/educational materials
- assisting with administrative matters regarding erosion and sedimentation control seminars held by the Commission
- coordinating activities with erosion and sedimentation control professionals and teachers

The intern is expected to work 15-20 hours per week during the remainder of the spring semester and 40 hours per week during the summer. A limited amount of travel is involved with this position. The pay rate is $11.50 per hour.

This internship is coordinated by the Water Resources Research Institute at NC State University.

Applications (consisting of a letter of application and resume) should be sent BY EMAIL to Greg Jennings, Associate Director of WRRI (Greg.Jennings@ncsu.edu). The letter of application should be addressed to the following:
