

FitzWest Datacenter Rules

Last updated: 2018-08-23

In this course, we will be deploying and managing servers in Duke's FitzWest datacenter. This is a real production datacenter hosting real workloads of significant importance to the university, so I ask that you read and agree to the following rules before being allowed badge access:

- 1. Don't touch other people's stuff. This includes racks other than the one assigned to us, other equipment in the room, and other group's servers in this course. The things you are allowed to mess with are (a) your server, (b) your power and network links, (c) shared tools/resources in the room (described below).
- 2. Respect shared resources. The room does contain generally useful things such as LCD monitors, keyboards, carts, screwdrivers, etc., which you may use provided you don't interfere with other work. You must put back anything you use when finished.
- 3. Report issues promptly. If you observe any problem with the datacenter, our equipment, etc., please report it to the instructor immediately.

Please sign below to indicate your understanding and acceptance of these policies.
